

‘People are too reliant on the government.’ Is this true of your society?

Examine the assertion that people are too dependent on the government to solve their problems.

Type: Paragraph Development

Date: 11 Apr 2020

Name: Bryan Salim

Album: Modern Society

Student Answer

1) Topic Sentence

Agree with the question perspective - explain why people are too dependent on the government - make sure that you provide the conceptualised

Answer

- economically government provide people the skill they needed in the work force

2) Elaboration

Explain how the main idea stated in the topic sentence relates to the idea that people are heavily-reliant on the government - ensure that you have a clear, systematic and logical process explanation.

Answer

the government help unskilled and unemployed people by teaching them the skill needed in the work force. Thus, they can earn money to live and escape for the state of poverty. Aids from government make people become more reliant to the government.

3) Example

Provide an illustration to show why the people are heavily reliant on the government - provide any relevant examples, statistics or news-related observations.

Answer

the government provide PMET for training the unskilled people, after the training they become skilled, then increasing the probability for them to be employed. Therefore, people are reliant to government because it helps people to be employed.

4) Concluding Sentence

Wrap up the discussion by reiterating your view to agree with the question perspective.

Answer

-- none --

Tutor Answer

1) Topic Sentence

Agree with the question perspective - explain why people are too dependent on the government - make sure that you provide the conceptualised

Answer

From an educational standpoint, people are arguably too reliant on the government as the grade-obsessed society is shaped by the state-guided educational pathways for career pursuits.

2) Elaboration

Explain how the main idea stated in the topic sentence relates to the idea that people are heavily-reliant on the government - ensure that you have a clear, systematic and logical process explanation.

Answer

In order for the country to be economically competitive, the government identifies and nurtures emerging industries that are potentially viable. As such, individuals are motivated to undergo educational development in these fields, with the expectation that their dependence on the government's direction would yield significant financial benefits.

3) Example

Provide an illustration to show why the people are heavily reliant on the government - provide any relevant examples, statistics or news-related observations.

Answer

For example, in the early 2000s, the Singapore government announced the establishment of the Biopolis, which was envisioned as a research and development hub for biomedical sciences. As the government identified it as the next promising area of growth, many individuals flocked to take up tertiary and diploma studies relating to this scientific field.

Similarly, after the Singapore government announced the official launch of the 'Smart Nation' initiative in November 2014, many students pursued courses, like computer science, to hop on the bandwagon. Besides the graduate employment survey pointed out that fresh graduates from local universities that studied computing science programme commanded a high salary that was on par with popular courses, like law and medicine.

4) Concluding Sentence

Wrap up the discussion by reiterating your view to agree with the question perspective.

Answer

Hence, it is evident that the people are reliant on the government to advance their educational development due to the popular notion that pursuing further education in promising industries would be beneficial to their career progression.
