

‘People are too reliant on the government.’ Is this true of your society?

Examine the assertion that people are too dependent on the government to solve their problems.

Type: Paragraph Development

Date: 11 Apr 2020

Name: Goh Wei Jie

Album: Modern Society

---

Student Answer

1) Topic Sentence

Agree with the question perspective - explain why people are too dependent on the government - make sure that you provide the conceptualised

Answer

People are too reliant on the government because economically, they believe that the government will provide a high standard of living for them.

---

2) Elaboration

Explain how the main idea stated in the topic sentence relates to the idea that people are heavily-reliant on the government - ensure that you have a clear, systematic and logical process explanation.

Answer

Singaporeans have a tendency to depend greatly on the government to resolve the economic related issues. This dependency developed over time with the Singaporean government's success in managing and resolving multiple economic crises. For instance, pushing out programmes and initiatives to aid Singaporeans in seeking out jobs and maintaining our economic growth. As a result of their past successes, we are able to achieve a high standard living. Hence we perceive the government to be competent problem solvers. Our confidence in them builds up as we have strong faith in them and rely on them to solve existing issues rather than resolve it on our own.

---

3) Example

Provide an illustration to show why the people are heavily reliant on the government - provide any relevant examples, statistics or news-related observations.

Answer

In recent years, the government pushed out the skills future programme, which essentially aimed to support Singaporeans in choosing their career paths. It provided both a clear direction and opportunities for people to work towards, giving citizens a sense of safety for their future. This programme not only improved the standard of living for them, but also build up their confidence in the government as it showed the government's competency and concern in improving our stanard of living.

---

4) Concluding Sentence

Wrap up the discussion by reiterating your view to agree with the question perspective.

Answer

Hence, the government's successes in dealing with economic related problems have improved our standard of living, cultivating a strong reliance in the people on them.

---

Tutor Answer

1) Topic Sentence

Agree with the question perspective - explain why people are too dependent on the government - make sure that you provide the conceptualised

Answer

From an educational standpoint, people are arguably too reliant on the government as the grade-obsessed society is shaped by the state-guided educational pathways for career pursuits.

---

2) Elaboration

Explain how the main idea stated in the topic sentence relates to the idea that people are heavily-reliant on the government - ensure that you have a clear, systematic and logical process explanation.

Answer

In order for the country to be economically competitive, the government identifies and nurtures emerging industries that are potentially viable. As such, individuals are motivated to undergo educational development in these fields, with the expectation that their dependence on the government's direction would yield significant financial benefits.

---

3) Example

Provide an illustration to show why the people are heavily reliant on the government - provide any relevant examples, statistics or news-related observations.

Answer

For example, in the early 2000s, the Singapore government announced the establishment of the Biopolis, which was envisioned as a research and development hub for biomedical sciences. As the government identified it as the next promising area of growth, many individuals flocked to take up tertiary and diploma studies relating to this scientific field.

Similarly, after the Singapore government announced the official launch of the 'Smart Nation' initiative in November 2014, many students pursued courses, like computer science, to hop on the bandwagon. Besides the graduate employment survey pointed out that fresh graduates from local universities that studied computing science programme commanded a high salary that was on par with popular courses, like law and medicine.

---

4) Concluding Sentence

Wrap up the discussion by reiterating your view to agree with the question perspective.

Answer

Hence, it is evident that the people are reliant on the government to advance their educational development due to the popular notion that pursuing further education in promising industries would be beneficial to their career progression.

---