

‘People are too reliant on the government.’ Is this true of your society?

Examine the assertion that people are too dependent on the government to solve their problems.

Type: Paragraph Development

Date: 11 Apr 2020

Name: Ziqing Heng

Album: Modern Society

Student Answer

1) Topic Sentence

Agree with the question perspective - explain why people are too dependent on the government - make sure that you provide the conceptualised

Answer

Economically, people are too reliant on the government to provide them with everything they need in life so they would have a comfortable life to live on.

2) Elaboration

Explain how the main idea stated in the topic sentence relates to the idea that people are heavily-reliant on the government - ensure that you have a clear, systematic and logical process explanation.

Answer

We rely on governments to provide us with subsidies for education like Edu-save, and for medical like Medi-save. Governments have been providing us with a lot of convenience and benefits which make us to over rely on governments' solutions in order to solve our own problems in life. We have this mentality that governments will help us in every aspects of our life as we have been living in a conformist society due to the paternalistic governance of the governments in the past.

3) Example

Provide an illustration to show why the people are heavily reliant on the government - provide any relevant examples, statistics or news-related observations.

Answer

For instance, governments have provide good solutions to help those PMET to find jobs such as future skills programme to ensure those people to be equipped with necessary skills needed. This will be useful to help us build confidence in the government which we will be supportive towards the government.

4) Concluding Sentence

Wrap up the discussion by reiterating your view to agree with the question perspective.

Answer

Hence, as governments have been helping the society in every way as they wanted citizen's support and confidence in the government, people have become too reliant on the government.

Tutor Answer

1) Topic Sentence

Agree with the question perspective - explain why people are too dependent on the government - make sure that you provide the conceptualised

Answer

From an educational standpoint, people are arguably too reliant on the government as the grade-obsessed society is shaped by the state-guided educational pathways for career pursuits.

2) Elaboration

Explain how the main idea stated in the topic sentence relates to the idea that people are heavily-reliant on the government - ensure that you have a clear, systematic and logical process explanation.

Answer

In order for the country to be economically competitive, the government identifies and nurtures emerging industries that are potentially viable. As such, individuals are motivated to undergo educational development in these fields, with the expectation that their dependence on the government's direction would yield significant financial benefits.

3) Example

Provide an illustration to show why the people are heavily reliant on the government - provide any relevant examples, statistics or news-related observations.

Answer

For example, in the early 2000s, the Singapore government announced the establishment of the Biopolis, which was envisioned as a research and development hub for biomedical sciences. As the government identified it as the next promising area of growth, many individuals flocked to take up tertiary and diploma studies relating to this scientific field.

Similarly, after the Singapore government announced the official launch of the 'Smart Nation' initiative in November 2014, many students pursued courses, like computer science, to hop on the bandwagon. Besides the graduate employment survey pointed out that fresh graduates from local universities that studied computing science programme commanded a high salary that was on par with popular courses, like law and medicine.

4) Concluding Sentence

Wrap up the discussion by reiterating your view to agree with the question perspective.

Answer

Hence, it is evident that the people are reliant on the government to advance their educational development due to the popular notion that pursuing further education in promising industries would be beneficial to their career progression.
